Hanjour leaves blank the "name and address" of his school, although this could be because he's applying for an F-1 student visa.

An unidentified consulate employee wrote about Hanjour: "has cash to travel alone I wants to go to flight school." There's no indication that Hanjour ever provided proof that he had this cash. And even if he did, that should have been a red flag — unless he could explain why he had that kind of cash to begin with.

A suspicious consulate employee wrote "like to stay three years & more!" and circled it.

Hanjour lists his U.S. destination as "AZ, Rent home." That's not exactly specific and should have raised a red flag.

Hanjour wanted to "visit" for "about three years." This is a problem for two reasons: 1) nobody "visits" a foreign country for "three years," and 2) the maximum visa length is 24 months, so he revealed his intent to overstay his visa.

Hanjour says his "father" will fund his trip in "cash." His word, however, is not good enough — and there's no indication in the comment area above from the consular officer that Hanjour offered proof that his "father" legitimately had access to large amounts of cash.

Hanjour went from a "three year" visit (in his first September visa application) to "one year" in order to "study." Again, a little too convenient for comfort.

Hanjour went from a U.S. destination of "AZ, Rent home" to a specific street address in Oakland, Calif. That's a little too convenient, especially since this second application was filed just two weeks after the previous one.

Waleed says his U.S. destination is "Wasaitwn," but it's not clear what city or state he's referring to. If it is "Washington," then it's not apparent whether he means the state or the District of Columbia. Either way, that's hardly an exact address.

Waleed said he planned to stay in the U.S. as a tourist for "4-6 months," yet it is unclear how he and his nominally employed brother, Wail, could afford such a pricey excursion.

Wail al-Sherhi lists the "Name and Street Address" of his employer as just "South City." Since his brother Waleed's application also lists "South City" as his school, this is clearly not the name or street address of Wail's employer.

Wail indicates "teacher." What is this? "Theater" or "Teacher"?

How will Wail's "teacher" salary will allow him to fund a "4-6 month" vacation for him and his brother, Waleed?

These blank fields alone should have triggered at least a temporary visa refusal so that this information could be provided.

Alomari lists "ALQUDOS HTL JED," a hotel in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia. This is a huge red flag as it shows that he's transient, and thus much more likely to overstay his visa once in America.
